Chicago Meat Authority Acquires Additional Processing Plant

Chicago, IL 8/15/08 – Chicago, IL. Chicago Meat Authority (CMA) announced today its acquisition of a 20,000 square foot USDA-inspected plant directly across 47th Place from CMA's current plant. It acquired this new space from a food service industry appetizer producer. This purchase allows CMA to increase plant size, offer additional job opportunities, expand existing product lines, introduce new capabilities, and reconfigure its current production lines for improved efficiency.

This acquisition falls directly in line with CMA's significant expansion plans for the next three years. The company is on pace to reach $90 million in sales in 2008, a 20% increase from last year. With the added space and its capabilities, CMA expects to double its fiscal 2007 sales within the next three years.

President and CEO Jordan Dorfman commented on the purchase, "Being able to acquire a USDA inspected plant on an adjacent property was a unique opportunity. The space can be easily reconfigured to suit our needs and brought on line very rapidly." Dorfman continued, "Recent expansions by CMA have created a campus environment on 47th Place, enhancing our operations as well as the local business community itself."

CMA is one of a handful of meat processors left in the historic Chicago Stockyards and this Back of the Yards neighborhood has made significant positive changes in recent years. Working in coalition with the City of Chicago, CMA has been a vital piece of this revival. After renovations are complete, the building will be ready for production on October 1, 2008 and help CMA for years to come.

CMA, located in Chicago's historic Stockyards, is a full line processor of pork and beef for food service, chain restaurants, and further processors. This privately held company prides itself in delivering customized beef and pork value-added products to customers around the world.
